

NATION'S FIRST PEACETIME CONSCRIPTION BILL IS APPROVED BY THE SENATE; MEETS STRONG OPPOSITION IN HOUSE

Carries Drastic Provisions To Draft Industry As Well As Men — Claim Powers Given by Bill Are Those of Dictator

By Robert A. McGill
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)
WASHINGTON, Aug. 29.—Carrying drastic provisions to draft industry as well as men, the nation's first peacetime military conscription bill met strong opposition in the House today after approval last night by the Senate, 58 to 31.

House administration leaders expressed confidence the program to conscript men between 21 and 31 for one year's training will eventually be approved, but they admitted concern over the Senate action giving the Government authority to take over industries that fail to co-operate in the defense program.

The legislation to conscript wealth, sponsored by Senators Russell (D., Ga.) and Overton (D., La.), was approved by the Senate, 69 to 16. The Secretaries of War or Navy would be empowered to commandeer plants, under approval of the President, when they are "unable to arrive at an agreement with the owner of such plants" over defense production.

Democrats and Republicans alike assailed the legislation as turning over unwarranted dictatorial powers to the Chief Executive and the War and Navy Departments. Rep. Faddis (D., Pa.) asserted:

"It will wreck the bill. It is foolish. After all, we propose to pass a draft bill to organize the country, not to

Truck Driver Held
For Further Hearing

A further hearing is arranged for tonight in the case of Richard Pillivant, 51, of Newark, N. J., who is alleged to have run over and fatally injured Harry Patterson Hewitt, 48, of Oxford Valley, Tuesday evening. The hearing this evening at eight will take place at the office of Justice of the Peace Daniel H. Krouse, Langhorne, R. D.

Pillivant, who was given a preliminary hearing Tuesday evening following the sudden death of Mr. Hewitt, was lodged in the county jail at Doylestown, he being held at that time without bail for a further hearing. Yesterday the court fixed the amount of bail at $5,000, and Pillivant remains in the county prison.

It is claimed that Pillivant's truck, owned by the American Rescue Mission, became stuck in a ditch below the Hewitt garage on the Lincoln Highway Tuesday evening. Hewitt towed the truck from the ditch, but upon arrival at his garage, it is stated that as he entered the garage, Pillivant started up his truck. Rushing to the vehicle, Hewitt is said to have leaped on the running board, trying to detain the driver to secure payment for the work. It is then that Pillivant is claimed to have shot across the highway, dislodging Hewitt when he struck a small embankment. It is believed that as the driver backed the vehicle, the wheels ran over Hewitt, breaking 11 ribs. Hewitt died en route to a Trenton hospital.

Pillivant was taken into custody as he drove on the wrong side of the four-lane highway, about a mile from the scene of the accident, the officer making the arrest learning later that the Newark man was wanted in the Hewitt case.

MOTORISTS URGED TO EXERCISE GREAT CAUTION

Have Cars Checked Before Starting and Get An Early Start, is Advice

DON'T TAKE CHANCES

With a three day holiday in the offing, Secretary of Revenue William J. Hamilton, Jr., today asked motorists who expect to travel on Pennsylvania's highways over Labor Day week-end to have their cars "safety-checked" before they leave; to start early; to drive carefully and to obey all the rules of the road.

Mr. Hamilton pointed out that over the same three day period last year there were 682 accidents on Pennsylvania's roads resulting in death to 23 persons and injuries to 674 others. In addition to those accidents he said there were 277 others which caused thousands of dollars damage to property.

Accidents on our highways during this coming Labor Day week-end can be kept to a minimum if motorists will observe the cardinal principles of safety and obey the rules of the road," Mr. Hamilton stated.

Sellersville Bund Loses Beer Permit

On the ground that it "sponsors or permits un-American activities," the State Liquor Control Board yesterday revoked the beer license of the Deutschorst Country Club, the busy Nazi Bund headquarters in Telford, near Sellersville, Bucks county.

The unprecedented action of the Liquor Board was the latest in the series of misfortunes that have hit the Hitler-heilers since the afternoon, just a year ago, that "Little Fuchrer" Fritz Kuhn told a cheering Bund crowd there that "Hitler can lick the world."

Kuhn is now in jail, and the Bund clubhouse and 63 acres of ground will be auctioned off next week in default of a $3700 mortgage.

The Liquor Board's revocation of the Deutschorst license was all the more emphatic a step because it dealt with an academic question. The license was for 1939, and was not renewed when it expired. The board therefore apparently did not have to act, but chose to do so.

Here and There in Bucks County Towns

Eleven of the 50 fraternal and social clubs in Bucks county were represented Monday night at the meeting of the Bucks County Federation of Fraternal and Social Clubs, at the Doylestown Maennerchor Society. Officers of the county unit including William Bealer, Quakertown, and Frank W. Worthington, Doylestown, together with Attorney Wilbur Van Dine, discussed club management and the advantages of the state and county organizations. Speakers urged every club in Bucks county to take an active interest and become affiliated with the county federation.

Bucks County Detective Russo and Private Harry Christ, of the Doylestown sub-station of the Penna. Motor Police, left Monday by motor for Beckley, West Va., to bring back Albert Korman, who was arrested in that city on the information of the Pennsylvania Motor Police, who charge him with the theft of an automobile and a pistol belonging to Mrs. Alec Manes, Upper Black Eddy.

The Doylestown sub-station of the Penna. Motor Police received word of the car theft on August 13, and immediately released a teletype dispatch to all police stations on the Motor Police hook-up. Several days later word was received from the Beckley police that Korman was under arrest in that city and had been found in possession of the stolen car.

Korman, whose home is believed to be outside of Pennsylvania, will be brought back to Doylestown for a hearing.

Believed to have been stricken with a heart attack, Miss Kathryn May Werts, 16, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold J. Werts, was found dead in bed at her home, 44 South Clinton street, Doylestown, about 6:30 Monday night.

Miss Werts, who would have been a junior at the opening of the Fall term at Doylestown High School in September, was exceptionally cheerful yesterday, but she retired about 6 o'clock to her room to read. She was found dead a half hour later.

The survivors include the parents and one brother, George Werts. Miss Werts was a member of the traffic squad of the Doylestown High School and the Doylestown Methodist Church.

Thirty-five dogs took part Sunday in the dress rehearsal outdoors—the agility and all-age match event of the Bulldog Club of Philadelphia—at the Jeffway Kennels of Mrs. Ruth Hathaway, New Britain Township. Judging was done by Richard Trimpi. Fanciers from several states attended the show, coming from as far away as Connecticut and Massachusetts.

The most outstanding dog in the regular match was James Gibbons "Gypsy Rose Lee," from East Orange, N. J. The most outstanding of the opposite sex was Mrs. H. T. Hampton's "Valent Tawny," another New Jersey entry.

There were seven entries in the A Class and three in the B Class of the future. The A class was won by Mr.

DOYLESTOWN, Aug. 29.—After 33 years of service as mail carrier in this Borough, Walter C. Hoffman will retire Saturday on full pension for the balance of his life.

During his 33 years on active duty Hoffman has walked 165,000 miles, at the rate of 17 miles per working day, better than six times around the world.

Hoffman expects to take it easy from now on. In his own words he says he's "going to stop wearing out shoes and wear out the seat of his trousers." He expects to spend the winters in Florida and a portion of his time at his cabin in Pike county.

During his term of service Hoffman, who carried mail in the west end of Doylestown, has toted approximately 643,500 pounds of mail, not counting the Parcel Post that he delivered here for three years, after working hours to make more money.

"I remember Doylestown when you could tell Monday, the wash day, by the red flannels hanging on the lines; now we see nothing but scanties and it reminds me of Eve's first wash day," Hoffman said yesterday.

Only twice in 33 years was Hoffman detained at home because of sickness. Eleven days was his longest absence from actual sickness but back in 1929 he broke his leg on duty and was absent four months with pay.

"Treat 'em all alike" has been Hoffman's slogan. "I have served the man up the alley with the same respect as the residents of the mansion house," Hoffman declared.

U. S. GAINS STYLE LEADERSHIP

The European war has quite wiped out Paris, not only as the capital of a once great nation, but also as the world capital of fashion and food and the joie de vivre. The deluge came so suddenly that many observers have not yet come to a full realization of the utterness of the sweeping away of a hoary tradition.
The kaleidoscopic picture of the world changes so fast day by day, that it seems almost impossible to put a finger on anything and say this is this and that is that.

In the present situation it is obvious that America has inherited the style dictatorship which once belonged to Paris. Such a remark is bound to come from almost any person who writes on this subject. But it is interesting to learn from one of the leading fashion advisers in New York that this is not a new development, and really has nothing to do with the war or the fall of France.

According to this expert, there has been going on for many years an interchange of ideas between the fashion moguls of New York and Paris and most of the world styles
for men and women, even in the days
when Paris was in her greatest glory
in this field, actually came from American designers. Paris during those years never admitted the obligation, but New York didn't mind.
It was all in the business, but today
it is told, as Paris knuckles down,
yet styles go on as merrily as ever.

The cute little Tyrolean dirndl,
the low-backed tennis dress, the little hats worn at the back of bobbed heads and other tricky devices of fashion, declared to have come from Paris, actually were originated in America, according to one famous fashion arbiter who in a recent interview in New York suggested that the loss of Paris is no loss to the art of dressing.

EXTERMINATED

When Leon Trotsky scurried out of a cellar rat hole in New York, in which he had been carrying on his subterranean activities for several years, and made his way to Moscow
to aid Lenin in bolshevizing Russia,
the little runt must have felt that he was a great success. So he was, in a way.

But his success was short lived.
When his skull was pierced by a pickaxe in the hands of a fellow rat in Mexico, he ended his career as he started it, living like a hunted rat.

His life spared by Stalin in a weak moment when the Trotsky-improved system of government caught up with its creator, Stalin's agents were constantly on the exile's trail and were reported several times to have almost caught up with him.
Stalin appeared to regard the exiling of Trotsky as his one big mistake as he never repeated it in subsequent purges of pals he selected for the discard.

A small army guarded Trotsky
after Cardenas took him in when no other nation in the world was open to him. But it proved unavailing against a pickaxe, and even Cardenas must feel relieved to be rid of his guest.

A government must look busy,
whether it is or not, to impress the customers if nothing else, and so when the Petain outfit found itself
face to face with an idle moment it issued a decree against too much joyfulness in France.

Poise is the quality exemplified

The GLASS SLIPPER

by MIGNON G. EBERHART

CHAPTER TWENTY-SIX
Brule's coupé was at the curb.
Their ride along Michigan Boulevard homeward was silent. Brule didn't say, I told you not to see much of Andy. He didn't say anything to Rue.

Gross opened the door for them and took Brule's coat and hat. "The police are here again, sir. Waiting to see Madam."

After a moment Brule said:
"About anything in particular, do you think, Gross?"

"I don't know, sir. The little one they call Funk is there too."

"I see." He turned. "Well, Rue, I'll go with you."

But they wanted to see Rue alone,
it developed—politely, for Oliver Miller did the talking, and he was always oily with politeness. Brule went away, and Rue, wondering if she would ever grow accustomed to those frequent, unpredictable bouts of questioning, sat down and, as usual, tried to hold herself steady, tried not to show fright and above all, as Guy had coached them all, to think twice before answering anything.

The difficult thing about those interviews was the unexpected way in which the detectives thrust new evidence into them, pouncing at her in the middle of familiar and worn paths of inquiry to ask something totally new and unexpected. Today
it was keys.

Keys to the Hatterick house.

Through what long and tedious avenues of inquiry Rue could only guess, they had discovered the lock-smith who had made Alicia's key.
He had made it at Crystal's order.
They knew the date, over a year ago,
now, and they knew that it had been given to Alicia promptly on the day
the locksmith had delivered it.

But he had made two keys.

Did Rue know anything of an extra key?

Rue didn't.

"Gross would know," she told them.

The little Funk, standing in the shadow of a window curtain, darted forward, looking very grimy and scared, and said Gross didn't know.

"All the members of the household except Miss Madge have keys, and Gross himself has a key. He says that's all there are."

"Perhaps someone lost a key, and the extra one was to replace it," said Rue. It seemed an extraordinarily tenuous kind of clue—if clue
they considered it.

She thought there was a kind of doubt on their faces, as if they agreed with her.

"Perhaps," said Miller a little heavily. "But Gross says there's been no key missing."

"But—but there are so many possibilities; an extra key . . ."

"I know," said Miller. "But the minds and the cook insist they have none; that Gross does all the locking and unlocking. He thought you might have had it, Mrs. Hatterick.
Or know something about it."

"Well, I don't," said Rue a little crisply. "I have—" She searched in her enormous flat bag, and drew out a smoothly worn key. "I have this one. That's all."

They let her go after a few more questions, again about the time and manner of Julie's arrival. They said nothing, that time, of Crystal's death.

Madge and Alicia were in the studio with Steven, and he was playing the piano. Alicia sat looking like an extremely beautiful portrait in her green gown, watching the fire broodingly, with its soft light putting a pale gold flush on her beautiful face. Madge sat in the deep bay window near the piano, her chin on her hand, staring out at the dreary gray sky, her scarlet sweater in bright contrast to the heavy brown curtains, which were open, in daytime, for light.

Rue hesitated on the threshold.
There was no place for her there.
She went upstairs and, forgetting that her own room—Crystal's room
—had now been opened and cleaned,
went to the little guest room beside Brule's study.

She had dropped her soft fur coat
and sat down, thinking of that businesslike interview just past, when she realized that someone—a woman —was in Brule's study. And she was crying and Brule was talking to her.

Afterward she sought back into her memory for other and preceding words—words she might have heard through that closed, concealed door,
as she entered the room, as she flung down her coat, as she sat lost in thought of that recent bout with the police. But she never could remember anything preceding the thing
she did hear.

The woman sobbed again, wretch-edly. And a man's voice said: "Give me to me. You're a fool. Bring them at once—and stop that shouting."

"I can't . . . I'm afraid . . . Murder . . ."

"Oh, you fool—"

It was Brule. And he was angry, his voice at its very white heat of anger. She'd seen him that way once, when a surgical nurse forgot a tube and the patient, a boy of fifteen, choked and died before they could do anything.

Brule's voice now brought the tragic, dreadful scene back to Rue.
Yet when he spoke again his voice had changed. It was almost coaxing. He said: "Come now, my dear.
You run along and do as I tell you.
Nothing's going to hurt you. Nothing at all . . . nothing . . ."

After a moment a door opened and closed, and there had been silence in the study. Whoever had been there had gone. One of the maids? Cook?
Who? Alicia and Madge were in the studio. Somehow the voice, sobbing though it was, had suggested Rachel. Brule must have gone with her.

But he hadn't. For the telephone rang in the study, and Brule's voice answered it.

"Yes, this is Doctor Hatterick." Brule's voice came hard and clear
through the closed door. "All right.
I'll come right away." The telephone clacked, and the door to the study slammed. Rue reached her own door as Brule started down the stairs.

"Brule—"

He jerked back toward her.
"Emergency," he said. "Let you know . . ." He was running downstairs. She heard him in the hall below. "Get my coat quick. Is my car still outside? No, I'll drive myself. Quicker."

He was gone.

She went back to the guest room,
perceived its slick emptiness, remembered that her own things had been removed to her room again and went, trailing her coat, into the laid, silk-draped bedroom with its French mirror and great bed.

It had been Rachel in Brule's study. Rue was sure of it. The girl's eyes were red and swollen.
She said in a subdued way that Gross had said the doctor had left.

"Yes, Rachel. There was an emergency at the hospital. What is it?"

But Rachel wouldn't say. She looked at Rue with dark, haunted eyes and asked when the doctor
would be back.

"I don't know. Rachel, what is wrong? What—what is it you are hiding under your apron?"

"Nothing, madam. Nothing—"

"Nonsense. There's something.
What?"

"Really there's nothing, madam.
It's nothing at all . . ."

"Let me see your hands, Rachel—"

The little orangy apron concealed only empty hands. Hands that were doubled up into tight fists.

Rue looked at them and said:
"What—" and Rachel defiantly opened her hands and held them
palm upward toward Rue, staring at her above them with somber, redrimmed eyes.

"There," said Rachel, "you see—"

Rue saw. Saw and shrank away and yet had to lean nearer to make sure she saw. But there was no mistake. Clear upon the girl's palms were smudges and blotched streaks
of green.

"Where . . . ?" breathed Rue at last. "How . . . ?"

"I don't know! I don't know, madam. I—I washed my hands and there it was. I don't know . . . but I know about her," she cried, gasping and flinging out her stained hands toward the hearthrug as if Julie's shabby little figure were still there. And then she looked at Rue again, and gave a strangled, sudden sob and ran out of the room. Hiding her stained hands below the scrap of orangy.

Rue did not follow her.

She didn't know how much later
it was that Steven knocked rather diffidently at her half-opened door and came in.

"All alone," he said. "May I come in? . . . Well, how goes it, Rue?
We're just going out for a drive. I thought you might like to go along."

He was watching her kindly, instantly aware, as Steven was always aware, of some special trouble.
He came to her and smiled down.
He already had his coat and muffler
on, and was carrying his hat. "Poor little Rue. The glass slipper isn't what it's cracked up to be."

The glass slipper. He'd talked of it before.

"Poor little Rue, caught between them," said Steven soberly. "I know . . ."

"I know," said Steven. And as she met his sober, dark eyes, all at once she saw something deeper than sympathy, something stronger than affection, and that was truth.
Steven did know.

But she had to say it, faltering:
"You mean—you know all about it,
Steven? You know . . . But you can't—"

"I know," he said again. "Alicia and Brule and—I've known for a long time, Rue."

It was very quiet in the rose-scented room. Rue looked up at the sensitive, slender face of the man who stood beside her.

"But you," she said wonderingly.
"You still—love her."

He nodded.

"I still love her. I'll always love her, I suppose. I can't help it. That's love, my dear. I suppose, always, there's a hope—like a little, flickering light at the end of a long lane."

"Steven . . ."

"Don't feel sorry for me." He smiled again. "My eyes are open.
Listen. Rue, my dear, you are young.
I'm not. Let me tell you something. There's always a time when it's stronger than you are; I've had my moments of rebellion and of struggle and of—well, of hatred.
Not—pleasant moments. But it's no good. I've got to accept the whole of it. Do you see?"

"Yes."

"No, you don't." He looked at her for a long moment and then unexpectedly bent and kissed her lips lightly. "What a dear child you are,
Rue," he said and turned abruptly and went to the door. He paused then.

"You're sure you won't go along?"

She didn't go. Afterward she thought of it, that instant of indecision. But it would have made no difference.

Labor Day Ideal For Barbecue

"Throwing A Barbecue" Is An Enjoyable Way to Entertain Friends

Just as the West itself has been "dudified," so has the old-fashioned barbecue. No one ever "gives" a barbecue, no one ever "holds" a barbecue, but everybody "throws" a barbecue these days.

Why don't you wind up a week-end of holiday entertainment on Labor Day by "throwing" a barbecue for your fun-loving friends?

Barbecuing—Outdoor Broiling
The important thing about successful barbecuing, Inez S. Willson, home economist, points out, is the secret of success in any type of meat cookery: cook the meat slowly at a low, even temperature. Barbecuing is broiling done over red hot coals rather than a flame.

It is important in barbecuing to know about the amount of heat required. Charcoal, charcoal briquettes or wood can be used in barbecuing. If you are barbecuing beef or lamb, allow the coals to flame for about an hour, then let the fire die and begin broiling. All cuts of beef may be served rare, medium or well done, while lamb should always be pretty well done.

The flavor of pork and veal is developed by a longer period of cooking. They are best when thoroughly cooked to their center; so when barbecuing pork or veal the coals should flame about two hours, before you begin broiling.

Grill Handy for Many Meats
Barbecue accommodations will usually provide a grill of some kind, or the smaller cuts of meat. Steaks, at least an inch thick and the thicker the better; lamb chops, ham slices, bacon, meat patties—all these reach perfection slowly browning on the grill.

Barbecue meats don't necessarily have to have special barbecue seasonings, but blends of herbs and spices which include garlic, leak, onion, sweet chili, salt and so forth give excellent results when discreetly used.

Barbecue accommodations are as versatile as their originator. You can build your own barbecue and make your equipment or you can choose the accessories from carefully anticipated displays. In other words, this is one time when you can be as pretentious as you desire or as rustic as you please.

Labor Day is the ideal occasion to

Versatile Veal Easily Prepared In Many Ways

One of the tastiest ways of serving veal chops is to dredge them in flour and brown them on both sides in hot lard, in the opinion of Inez S. Willson, home economist. When the chops are nicely browned, season them with salt, pepper and paprika. Add 1 cup sour cream, cover tightly and let cook very slowly until done. This will take about 45 minutes.

When browned, remove the chops to a hot platter and make sour cream gravy by thickening drippings and adding more liquid.

Special Breaded Veal Steaks

Veal chops are also very good bread-

ed in creole style. Dip the chops in seasoned bread crumbs, then in a beaten egg and again in bread crumbs. Brown the chops in hot lard on both sides, then place them on a rack in a heavy frying-pan, add 1 No. 2½ can tomatoes, 1 small chopped onion, ¼ cup chopped green pepper; cover and cook slowly for one hour.

Food For Thought In Hot Weather

Inez S. Willson, home economist, makes these hot-weather food suggestions. . . . Minced crisp BACON and chopped endive seasoned with lemon juice and paprika for tasty sandwiches. . . . Tomato cups filled with diced BOLOGNA and whole kernel corn, dotted with butter, sprinkled with cracker crumbs and baked or broiled. . . . Cold sliced TONGUE and pickled peaches

. . . FRANKFURTS, split, stuffed with cheese, wrapped with bacon and broiled. . . . Creamed DRIED BEEF served over waffles. . . . Lamb en brochette made at the out-of-doors fireplace. . . . COLD CUTS of meat attractively arranged with relishes and cheese. . . . Diced SALAMI in potato salad. . . . Asparagus bundles wrapped with thin slices of HAM, baked or broiled, and served with cheese sauce. . . . Cold, diced PORK with apples and celery in a salad. . . . Sliced LIVER- SAUSAGE pan-fried in butter. . . . FRANKFURTS ground with mustard pickles, mixed with mayonnaise and used as a spread for broiled open-face sandwiches. . . . Broiled SWEET- BREADS with tomato sauce, crisp bacon and hard cooked eggs, quartered. . . . DICED HAM creamed with sliced stuffed olives and served in patty shells or on baking powder biscuits. . . . LAMB PIE using well-seasoned, mashed potatoes brushed with beaten egg yolks as the covering. . . . Pan-broiled SAUSAGE CAKES on toast covered with soft scrambled eggs with cream cheese. . . . Slices of CANADIAN STYLE BACON broiled with peach halves sprinkled with sugar and curry powder. . . . French-fried LIVER with French-fried onions. . . . Thinly sliced cold CORNED BEEF and horseradish sauce. . . . LAMB CHOPS grilled with pineapple slices, bacon, tomato cups filled with whole kernel corn and cooked potatoes sprinkled with cheese. . . . The Great Game of Politics generally. The job he has done as chairman of the RFC is generally recognized as outstandingly good. His is one of the few governmental agencies conducted with competency and common sense. Personally, Mr. Roosevelt is not greatly enamored of Mr. Jones. Mr. Jones is not one of the Presidential intimates. They do not speak the same language. The "forward-looking men" of the "inner circle" suspect—and not without foundation—that he is no New Dealer at heart and that the spending policy, basic in the New Deal philosophy, has never appealed to him as sensible.

NEVERTHELESS, it is recognized, even by the bright boys of the brain-trust, that Mr. Jones is an asset to the Administration. When embarrassed by attack or when events make it expedient, he can be pointed to as evidence that the Administration is not really inimical to business. Other businessmen—Mr. Hanes is an example—have entered the Administration, become disgusted and discouraged and gone out. But Mr. Jones stays on. He was there before Mr. Roosevelt became President and he stays because he has had a big, congenial job, which he has done well and enjoyed doing.

AND HE has had little interference. One shudders to think of what would have happened had a really convinced New Dealer had the handling of the billions which Mr. Jones has dispersed and the power which those billions conferred. The New Dealers do not like him. They know he is not one of them. But he is irreplaceable and immovable, partly because of his record and partly because he has more friends in Congress than any other individual officeholder. At the Chicago convention, for some strange reason, Mr. Jones developed Vice-Presidential aspirations, but these were contemptuously swept aside by Mr. Hopkins and other representatives of Mr. Roosevelt, who ran the convention under his telephonic direction.

SUFFICIENT headway, however, was obtained by Mr. Jones' candidacy to impress the President with the strength of his business backing. He had known, of course, that Mr. Jones had more standing in the business world than anyone else in his Administration, but he had not appreciated just how strong it really was.

PRESSED by the necessity of filling Mr. Hopkins' shoes, it is easy to understand why the President should now turn to Mr. Jones. His appointment would be eminently acceptable to business generally and might diminish somewhat the solidity of Mr. Wilkie's business support. Also, undoubtedly it would make easier the job of Mr. Frank Walker and Mr. Eddie Flynn in collecting their campaign fund. All that is clear enough. But look at it from Mr. Jones' angle.

IN the first place, there certainly is no honor in becoming Mr. Hopkins' successor. Under Mr. Hopkins the department has deteriorated until the condition is really deplorable. Next to labor, it is the least desirable and distinguished of all the Cabinet posts. In power as well as prestige, the position Mr. Jones now holds is infinitely superior to the one he is offered.

Should he accept, it would be demotion, not a promotion. The suggestion, which the White House has now put out, that he hold on to both jobs did not come originally from the President, but from Mr. Jones. Without a special act of Congress it is clearly illegal, but the anxiety to get Mr. Jones seems so great that the White House is prepared to ask Congress to pass such an act. The popularity of Mr. Jones probably would secure it. If he can combine the Commerce Department with the big office he holds now, the power and importance of Mr. Jones will be greatly increased. Probably that will attract him.

NEVERTHELESS, it is an extraordinary thing for the President to propose to a man not really in sympathy with his policies and not trusted by the aides upon whom he now relies. Apparently, the explanation is that Mr. Jones is the only available man in sight and his conditions must be met if his acceptance is to be had. It is not easy to find a first-class businessman willing to follow Mr. Hopkins into a disordered department merely for the sake of being in the Cabinet. For one thing, there are few first-class businessmen supporting Mr. Roosevelt this time and, except for the question of patriotism, no first-class man would want to be in the Cabinet of a President for whom he did not intend to vote. Mr. Jones is a very canny man and knows all these things perfectly well.

have been cleaned, and in a number of instances painted. New desks have been installed in some of the rooms.

The concrete steps between the old and new buildings have been given a new grey coat of paint which is something heavier than has ever been used before, and it is believed it will hold up better than the usual battleship grey paint.

The science laboratory in the old building, which is the headquarters of Spurgeon B. Wuerntzenberger, will be outfitted with new desks.

All the classrooms in both buildings have been thoroughly cleaned. The floors have been waxed and the desks have been varnished.

The press room which is off the stairway on the third floor has been entirely repainted for Miss Ruth A. Naylor and her school publication staff.

New glass panes, which have been painted in order to diffuse the light, have been put in the bay windows on the Broad street side on the second floor. New desks have been installed in Room I which is one of the rooms benefiting from the new panes.

The desks in the junior high school rooms of Miss Ada M. Griffith and Mrs. Mabel McCord Elliott have been sanded and varnished.

The manual training department equipment has been cleaned and the room readied for Frank B. Vocum.

The school gymnasium which has been entirely repainted including the walls and ceiling, is quite attractive since eight new ceiling light fixtures have been installed. They will eliminate any glare.

The floor, which has been repainted for the various indoor games, was waxed after having been given a coat of filler.

Five new gas ranges enhance the home economics department of the cafeteria, and they will be a decided asset to Miss Ella D. DeWees, head of the department. The tables will have new tops, replacing the old, unsightly asbestos tops which are worn and outmoded.

The opportunity class room has been cleaned and the equipment varnished and painted.

The rest rooms have been repainted and thoroughly cleaned.

MAKE THIS LABOR DAY

a SAFE Holiday

...from START to FINISH!

LABOR DAY WEEK-END. Automobile traffic hits its annual peak. Accidents may hit their peak, too, unless motorists and pedestrians cooperate in carefulness. Last Labor Day week-end, 23 died on Pennsylvania roads... 11 of them pedestrians!

There's bound to be congestion. Slowed-up traffic is inevitable. Speed is doubly dangerous on overloaded highways.

Here are some suggestions that will add immeasurably to your safety during these three crowded days:

SAFETY-CHECK YOUR CAR!

Be sure brakes, tires, headlights are O. K. before you start.

GET AN EARLY START!

Roads will be less crowded...traffic will flow more smoothly.

DON'T TAKE CHANCES!

Keep your car under control... and under 50! Keep on your own side of the road at all times.

BE COURTEOUS!

Drive with courtesy as well as care! Dim lights when approaching cars at night. FIFTEEN out of 23 fatal accidents last Labor Day week-end occurred at night.

Don't merely talk about safety—PRACTICE it!

BRISTOL THEATRE

When Hal Roach's "Turnabout" was unveiled last night at a gala premiere at the Bristol Theatre, another smash hit comedy was added to the movie-goer's list of must pictures.

For "Turnabout," based on the highly humorous Thorne Smith novel, is one of the gayest and sprightliest modern comedies seen in many a moon. It was excellently directed by Hal Roach himself, and its starring cast is headed by Carole Landis, John Hubbard, Adolphe Menjou, Mary Astor, Verree Teasdale, Donald Meek, William Gargan and Franklin Pangborn.

Acclaimed at press previews as one of the great pictures of recent years, "Four Sons," 20th Century-Fox film comes today to the Grand Theatre.

Heading the powerful cast is Don Ameche who, fresh from his triumph in "Lillian Russell," is said to give the most stirring performance of his career. He reveals a dramatic power hitherto unsuspected, and delivers his role in a powerfully simple style.

Eugenie Leontovich was persuaded by 20th Century-Fox to play the role of the mother, and she is said to more

SUNDAY DINNER Suggestions

WHEN planning your menus for the Labor Day week-end it might be an excellent idea to arrange them so that most of the cooking can be done on Saturday, leaving both Sunday and Monday free for the housekeeper to relax and take part in holiday festivities.

This does not mean that it will be necessary to have two cold meals. It merely means that menu items should be so selected that there is not a great deal of last minute preparation.

Although beef is still not quite as good a buy as some of the other meats, prices are no higher than last week and a roast of beef can be made to do for three meals, first hot, then cold and then into a stew or hash. There is a slight advance on pork loins this week but they are still a good buy. Duckling remains so low in price it is probably the best selection in the poultry division, although fryers, broilers and small roasting chickens are also low priced and well worthy of consideration.

If the family has a yen for shrimp this is a good week to serve them a salad, curry or cocktail of this seafood since the supply is much more plentiful and prices are correspondingly lower.

Pears, California figs, Florida oranges, Northwest Greening apples and seedless grapes are plentiful in the market this week. There is an excellent supply of huckleberries which are delicious in pies, dumplings, muffins and tarts. In the realm of vegetables both green corn and lima beans are at their best and low priced and plentiful are green beans, beets, cabbage, carrots, onions, peppers, potatoes and tomatoes.

The following menus in three price ranges are suggested by Miss Cora Anthony of the A&P kitchens for Sunday dinners:

Low Cost Dinner

Casserole of smoked ham slices and potatoes baked in milk
Fresh stewed tomatoes
Sliced oranges and bananas with coconut
Iced tea or iced coffee

Moderate Cost Dinner

Tomatoes stuffed with cottage cheese
Spiced tongue
Scalloped cabbage
Batter bread
Peach tarts
Iced tea or iced coffee

Very Special Dinner

Honeydew cocktail
Roast beef with oven browned potatoes
Fresh succotash
Huckleberry pie
Iced tea or iced coffee

than justify her selection. The famous actress brings to the screen the quality of greatness she has shown in the past in her stage performances in "Grand Hotel," and "20th Century."

RITZ THEATRE

Warner Bros.' new film, "Flight Angels," is now at the Ritz, and movie-goers will see a thrilling picture whose theme deals with the careers of Flight Angels (airline hostesses). The film's all-star cast includes such popular players as Dennis Morgan, Virginia to organize it. The best war-time management of industry is natural management. The people who support this legislation do so in ignorance or to sabotage the draft bill.

Nation's First Peacetime Conscription Bill Approved

Rep. Wolcott (R.), Mich., said: "To give the President authority to conscript people in peacetime is dictatorial. Add to that the power to conscript industry and the President has more power than any dictator in Europe. That Senate amendment is justification for every member in the House to vote against the bill if it stays in."

The House Military Affairs Committee, considering its own conscription bill, is expected to extend the draft age from 21 to 45, after eliminating home defense training for men 18 to 21 and 45 to 65. The home defense program was also eliminated by the Senate Military Affairs Committee.

House leaders hope to consider the bill next week. The Senate debated the measure more than two weeks.

The Senate defeated 50 to 35 the principal substitute measure to defer conscription until January 1, in favor of voluntary enlistments. It was sponsored by Senator Maloney (D.), Conn. but it adopted the Adams amendment to extend seven and eight per cent profit limitations on naval airplanes and armament to all army ordnance.

Under the Senate measure the conscripted army can be used anywhere in the Western Hemisphere. Sponsored by Senator Lodge (R.), Mass., this provision was interpreted as a broad step in co-operating with Canada and Latin American countries in hemispheric defense.

MULHOLLAND ANXIOUS TO PLAY LANDRETH NINE

Editor Courier:

As manager of the Bristol A. A. baseball club I would like to pit my club against the Landreth club in a series of three games to be played on Landreth field on any reasonable terms.

Our record this season rates my club as one of the strongest clubs in the semi-pro ranks. The sporting public is asking me why this series is not played. But the only hold back is that Manager Landreth seems a little scared to play this series. His only alibi is he is afraid I will pad up my club. I wish to state I will play my regular line-up which I have had all season—VanZant, Stover, Dick, Palowez, Stallone, Harrison, Felkner, Cahill, Palumbo, Downsap, Hunter, Linck, Hughes.

Hoping to get an early reply, I remain yours in sport.

JOHN A. MULHOLLAND,
Manager,
Bristol A. A. Baseball Club
Bristol, Pa.

GAME SCHEDULED TO BE PLAYED TONIGHT

Postponed twice because of rain, the King Supply-Diamond game is scheduled to be played tonight on the Bensalem Township high school field, Cornwells. A victory for the Diamond team will place it in a deadlock with Croydon Y. M. A. for first place.

Manager Diamanti will use his ace right-hander "Ad" Helveston against the Supply team while Manager Bill Reed will pit Pat Moylan, LaSalle College twirler, against the Andalusia boys. Angelo and O'Donnell will be the receivers.

In the event of a Diamond win, a three game series will take place between that club and Croydon to decide the championship and the winner of the large trophy donated to the league. A King victory will mean the starting of the playoffs tomorrow night between the first and third place teams and second and fourth place. Two diamonds, Rohm and Haas and Landreth's will be used for the playoffs.

All games will begin at 6:15 o'clock sharp.

HOCKEY TEAMS PLAN A "GRUDGE" TILT TONIGHT

CROYDON, Aug. 29—A roller hockey game will be played at the Croydon Roller Rink tonight. This is termed a "grudge" battle between Croydon Ramblers and the newly-formed Croydon Rex team, managed by George Strickler.

Coach "Pop" Keene, of the Ramblers, will have the same players who were on last year's team: Goalie, Dick Johnson; defense, Capt. Bill Ritter, Elmer Bowers, Bud Bickert and Stanley Boltz; centers, George Ritter and Bud Bowen; wings, Tommy Keene, Bud Ritter, Bill Bell, Bob Jayne and George Strickler.

Croydon Ramblers finished in third position in the Eastern League last season, and this season aim for a franchise in the New Jersey State Hockey League.

TO PLAY FISHERS A. A.

The Bristol A. A. baseball club will travel to Philadelphia on Sunday and play the Fishers A. A. at Second and Godfrey streets, at 3 p. m. The Fishers Club last Saturday defeated Mayfair, leaders of the Philadelphia League, by the score of 4-1. The A. A. club will have the following players to bring home the bacon: VanZant will do the catching with Stover on the hill, Ferguson on first, Stallone on second, Palumbo on short, Felkner on third. The outfield will be Downsap, Hunter, Harrison, Cahill and Linck. The A. A. club will leave Bristol at 1 p. m.

TO START PRACTICE

Candidates wishing to try for positions on the Bristol A. A. football team this season, are asked to report at Leedom's field Sunday morning at 10 o'clock.

Manager Mulholland has not decided who will do the coaching this season, having several in view.

The local club, formerly the Bristol Rees, this season will be very strong, having several star players wishing to sport the A. A. colors, namely Edge and James, the colored flash from Riverside to bolster up the backfield. The club will be newly uniformed.

Nazis Claim Success

Berlin, Aug. 29—Continued success for Nazi bombing plans was claimed in today's communiqué by the German High Command which said:

"Our bombers yesterday effectively attacked airports at Eastchurch and Southend and the harbor of Bognor Regis on the south coast.

"During the night docks, piers at Liverpool, Cardiff, Bristol, Middlesbrough and Thameshaven and armament factories at Sheffield, Norwich and Coventry were subjected to intensified bombardment.

"Yesterday's enemy losses were 44 planes and one barrage balloon, while Germany lost 15 planes."

RAF Plans Systematic Raids

London, Aug. 29—Britain's Royal Air Force has plans for systematic destruction of scores of military objectives in the Berlin area, British authorities said today.

They declared destruction of these objectives will be carried out "with the same precision and success that has wrought damage to 175 industrial areas in Western Germany."

Editor's Note: Berlin dispatches said 10 persons were killed and 28 injured in the German capital early today when British planes raided Berlin for three hours. Berlin reported that bombs fell on a southeastern workers' district, damaging a whole block of houses.

In Western Germany, British sources stated, industrial areas have been raided, when necessary, as many as 50 times each in order to complete the devastation of individual targets.

Objectives of this nature were identified as the Dornier airplane factory at Wismar and the Fockewulf factory at Bremen.

British quarters said it can "now be revealed" that raids by British bombers have forestalled the appearance of large numbers of new German Fockewulf twin-engine fighting planes, supposed to be superior to Britain's Spitfires.

Simultaneously the British admiralty announced that Britain's new Skua dive bombers of the fleet air arm took the offensive over the Norwegian coast yesterday.

The Skuas raided an oil depot which previously had been attacked, scoring direct hits on two remaining oil tanks, setting the larger of the two on fire.

Bomb Suez Canal

Rome, Aug. 29—Italian planes have bombed the Suez Canal, one of the main objectives of the Italian African campaign, it was announced in Rome today.

The Italian military bulletin said "Italian air formations bombed the naval base at Alexandria."

"Despite adverse weather conditions, Italian planes flew over the Suez Canal between Port Said and Ismailia, dropping bombs on the northern opening of the Suez Canal and also on the Alkantara Crossing, over which the railway uniting Egypt and Palestine passes."

"On the Sudan-Egyptian border an English company with a few armored cars attempted an incursion into Italian territory. Repulsed, the enemy were able to take back numerous wounded, while Italian losses were slight."

Expect Employment To Increase

By International News Service

Harrisburg, Aug. 29—Addition of 250,000 workers to Pennsylvania's industrial payrolls between now and December was predicted today by State employment authorities.

The increase is expected to be based largely on government orders in connection with the National Defense program, State Secretary of Labor and Industry Lewis G. Hines reported.

An additional 40,000 workers were added to industry's payrolls in this State in July, raising to 3,200,000 persons the total employed in all fields.
